

| | |
|------|--|
| 受験番号 | |
|------|--|

CM

| | |
|---|--|
| I | |
|---|--|

I

問 1 c

問 2 b

問 3 d

問 4 a

問 5 c

問 6 4

問 7 b

問 8 d

問 9 d

問 1 0 c

CM

| | |
|----|--|
| II | |
|----|--|

II

問 1 d

問 2 b

問 3 a

問 4 d

問 5 b

問 6 c

問 7 a

問 8 d

問 9 c

問 1 0 b

CM

III

III

解答例

Some might say that it's better to reveal bad news about a patient's health directly to the patient's family members and not to the patient. However, I think that it is better to tell a patient directly, perhaps with a family member present, for several reasons. First, it is the patient's body and health, so the patient deserves to know first. Telling someone else before the patient has heard anything seems insincere. Second, a doctor can't be sure that the family members will share all information with the patient, who deserves to hear the news directly from the doctor. It is irresponsible for a doctor to not share bad news directly with his or her patient. Finally, there is a natural course of emotions through which a person needs to travel in order to come to terms with bad health news. Not giving the patient a chance to start on this path as soon as possible is equal to robbing them of their dignity. In the past, it may have been normal for doctors to not reveal bad health news directly to patients, but I support the opposite approach for the above three reasons. (194 words)